TOO WEAK TO FIGHT
 The "Come-back" man was really never down-and-out. His weakness condition because of overwork, lack of exercise, improper eating and living demands attention to satisfy the cry for a health-giving appetite and the refreshing sleep essential to strength. GOLD MEDAL, Haslam Oil Capsules, the National Remedy of Holland, will do the work. They are wonderful. Three of these capsules each day will put a man on his feet before he knows it; whether his trouble comes from over-exhaustion, the kidneys, gravel or stone in the bladder, stomach derangement or other ailments. They are not over-dosage. American. Don't wait until you are entirely down-and-out, but take these today. The capsules will gladly refund your money if they do not help you. CARPENTER HAS FATAL FALL AT SHIPYARD
 George Ober, employed at the Groton Iron Works at Groton, fell while engaged at work outside the fabricating shop at 10 o'clock Monday and died at 5 o'clock in the evening at the hospital.
 He was a carpenter, or a carpenter's helper, and was at work on a staging some 30 feet above the ground. He slipped and fell from the staging and landed flat on his back. When picked up, he was unconscious, and Dr. Purdy, the Groton Iron Works physician, attended him and ordered him removed to the hospital. On the way to the hospital he regained consciousness. It was thought at first that his back was broken, but his death came from concussion of the brain, it was reported.
 Ober's home was at 25 Allen street, Groton.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS
 What Eastern Connecticut Boys Are Doing in Various Branches of the Service.
 In Gas Shell Region.
 The following extracts from letters of Captain John S. Blackman of this city give interesting sketches of military life over there:
 The enemy put over a few hundred gas shells on a nearby town a few nights ago, and gassed about 100; not dead, but sent to hospitals. Consequently, we went over 2,000 gas shells the next night as a retaliatory measure.
 Last night we had an amusing incident. Everybody was in bed, when suddenly the horn blew the gas alarm (our first).
 We sat on our masks and mackintoshes over our pajamas and went out. I tested for gas and found none. I removed my mask and went to my innards. Two boys away to give the recall. As I opened the door I saw a sure and amusing sight by candlelight. The men were all up in the state of dishevelled and slickers, sprayers ready and pointed at the door. They look very grotesque in their mackintoshes, like a pig, or like an elephant with his trunk cut off. The wind was too strong for a gas attack, and from the wrong direction, but the guard saw gas signals from the regiment on our right, so sounded his horn.

July 15.
 This won't be much for a letter, as I am writing on my lap by candlelight. We moved out Saturday night, and arrived at this place after a three mile march. It was raining when we moved, and the road was muddy and rough, and I was about all in when I arrived. The boots have too thin soles for long walks and rain coat, overcoat, etc.
 Yesterday noon we were notified to be ready to move by motor truck at a moment's notice, but at eight p. m. it was decided not to move. Last night we heard a violent artillery fire all night, and today's communique says that the Boche made an attack on a forty kilometer front, and the French and the Americans are fighting heroically. They did not get by the first line today. Tomorrow we have a nine mile march to another trench (however), but yours truly sent for his horse today, and it is now here, ready.

July 15.
 Another move and entirely different scene. Started quietly about 10 p. m. and wound down the hills through woods and a ruined village to the main road, a long white stretch in the moonlight. After leaving the village, a French officer who was riding beside me said: "This is a bad place for a trench, as the railroad station is every day." I peered around, but could see no station, only the tracks. They had apparently done a good job, for there was no station, only the tracks. They had apparently done a good job, for there was no station, only the tracks.

July 15.
 It was a long tiresome march (the men carried packs weighing anywhere from 60 to 80 pounds) through two ruined villages, and by that I mean absolutely ruined; stone houses that were mere shells, no roofs, walls down, or standing like gaunt white specters in the moonlight. A sign of life was seen in the distance. A man came along a big plateau. The road runs just under the crest of sight, finally down a steep hill, a sharp turn to the left, and finally to a small village. The officers went up and down, giving a word of cheer here and there, and then the march was resumed. The road runs just under the crest of sight, finally down a steep hill, a sharp turn to the left, and finally to a small village.

STATE HOSPITAL PITCHER GASED IN FRANCE
 In a letter recently received by Norwich friends from Sergeant Robert O. Fletcher, now with the supply company of the 8th regiment, formerly sportsman editor of the Bulletin, he writes of seeing in a base hospital in France, Jim Hawkins, who used to pitch for the Norwich State Hospital baseball team. Hawkins was in the hospital, because he had been gassed, and will have some tale to tell when he gets back to the states, writes sergeant Fletcher.

How does the war news strike you today? Three thousand prisoners, 300 guns, and two colonels and staffs, and still going on. We are still in the same place and have no share in that business. They failed here once after great losses and my opinion is that no one will allow to try again, and by winning, belittle the former leader, who he failed. Time will tell. Wasn't it peculiar that we should know about the situation at the front? We did not, of course know where it was to begin, but were prepared; and we were a few miles away from one end of it. I never saw a pocket of gas on June 15. We could hear the guns all night and the next day, and at night could see the flashes like heat lightning. Up drive, similar to clouds, and lighting of the sky, and could hear nothing. The guns were so far away.
 This village is like the first one we arrived at. It has a few stone houses, with tiled roofs. No civilians live here now here since the offensive of two years ago. They cannot push back now any more than they could then, and I don't believe any one will be allowed to try. They will take up chances of some general doing what "sonnie" could not do.

TROTTERS OF CLASS WILL RACE AT FAIR
 The general consensus of opinion of the horsemen of this section is that there will be a big race at the County Fair this year that will give everybody something to talk about for some time after the fair is over. There are a number of horses, many good horses entered for the race, and the horses are mainly horses with a record so that it will be a battle before the division of the purses is decided.
 At Hills Grove on Aug. 14th, Plucky Chap won the 215 trot; six heats being necessary to decide the race and the fifth heat being a dead heat. Plucky Chap won the third, fourth and sixth heats. The horse that was pitched to victory by Wm. Crozier and he has won eleven races on the Bay State Circuit with a total winning of purses amounting to $5,200.
 Peter Pan won third in the same race and Evan Williams, driven by O'Brien, won fourth. On Aug. 15th, the 221 trot at the same track, purse $400, Ella Scott, driver, Brusie, won second and Radiant, owned by H. L. Handy of Springfield won third. All these horses are entered in the

TENTS AND JUDGING RING AT COUNTY FAIR
 The old Fair Grounds at the opening of the county fair at Norwich, Conn., on Labor Day bid fair to give the visitors coming in through the big gates all the appearance of a tented circus. There will be a big exhibit of the New London Ship and Engine company housed in two large tents. The War Savings stamps committee of Connecticut will have their exhibit in a tent in charge of Chairman Rodier, and the Connecticut State Fair will have a large tent housing their exhibit.
 To continue the effect of the circus there is being built on the grounds of the main fair building a large cattle show ring, 35 by 50 feet and all cattle entered in contest for premiums will be led out and judged in this ring. This is rather a novelty here in the eastern part of the country but all the western fairs judge all cattle in the show ring.
 The cattle will be judged by Prof. J. C. McNutt, of the Department of Animal Husbandry, Massachusetts Agricultural College at Amherst, Mass. He also judges the yearlings of the Ohio State Fair, the New York State Fair and the Blockton Fair.

 The local postmaster finds that many people have failed to fulfill their pledges to buy war savings stamps. The sale of stamps this month is not up to the average. It looks as though the people are forgetting about their pledges or they do not intend to live up to them.
